PRODUCT DESCRIPTION

A magnificent haul of imposing vintage bulkhead wall lights salvaged from Fawley Power Station, a brutalist landmark building on the gateway of The Solent.

These beauties lined the turbine hall, the largest in Europe, and the associated tunnels and passageways around it.

A heavyweight cast-iron casing houses a beautiful double-thickness prismatic glass lens. They retain the original Hammerite type finish, in excellent original condition.

This Art-Deco design was produced by Maxlume for decades. It has angles in all the right places, and we love the fact that the architects of a 1965 brutalist building commissioned such a decorative fitting.

Hitting the elusive sweet-spot between industrial and decorative these lights can bring style and substance to a range of interiors.

The decommissioned Fawley site has featured in a host of movies, including Star Wars and Mission Impossible, for more info please click here.
